

Argumentative Essay About Abortion Disagree

Abortion should not be considered a form of birth control. While some may argue that abortion is an acceptable means to terminate a pregnancy, it should not be used as a primary or secondary method of contraception. The decision to abort a fetus should only be made in extreme circumstances and when continuing the pregnancy would cause serious danger or harm to the mother's health and well-being.

In addition, abortion disregards the value of human life by intentionally ending a life after conception has occurred. Even in cases where the unborn child has been diagnosed with severe deformities or medical conditions which will likely result in its death soon after birth, abortion is still not an appropriate solution. In these cases, parents are better off carrying their baby to term, giving the fetus a chance to live its short life in comfort and surrounded by loved ones.

Finally, abortion can have severe physical and psychological effects on the mother. Even though it is technically a surgical procedure, abortion carries many risks just like any other medical procedure. Women who undergo abortions may experience complications such as infection or even depression. It is important that women undergoing abortions receive professional help to prepare them emotionally and physically for the decision they are making so that they do not suffer long-term mental or physical damage as a result of their decision.

Abortion should only be an option when all other alternatives have been exhausted and there is no other way out of an unwanted pregnancy. The decision to terminate a pregnancy is one that should not be taken lightly. Everyone involved in the decision-making process should be well informed of all the risks and potential outcomes before moving forward with an abortion. It is important to remember that abortion is not a form of birth control, but rather a final option used only as a last resort when no other options are available.

In conclusion, while abortion can be seen as acceptable under certain circumstances, it should not be considered a primary or secondary form of contraception. The decision to abort a fetus should only be made in extreme cases where continuing the pregnancy would cause serious danger or harm to the mother's health and well-being. In addition, abortion should always be approached with caution, understanding that there are risks associated with the procedure and potential emotional and physical repercussions for those involved. Abortion should not be taken lightly, but rather treated with care and respect for the value of human life.
