

Argumentative Essay About Abortion in the Philippines

The right to life is a fundamental human right that should be extended to all, and this includes the unborn. Abortion has been a contentious issue in the Philippines with some advocating for its legalization while others are opposed. While it can be argued that abortion has its benefits, I argue that it should not be legalized in the Philippines due to numerous factors including religious beliefs, cultural norms, and lack of access to contraception.

Religion plays an important role in Filipino society and many Filipinos adhere to Christianity or Catholicism which strictly forbids abortion as a means of birth control. The Roman Catholic Church views abortion as a sin against God's law and considers it an unjustified killing of innocent human life. This view is shared by other religions such as Islam and Buddhism which also reject abortion as a form of birth control. Furthermore, legalizing abortion would go against the long-held moral and ethical beliefs of many Filipinos.

In addition to religious beliefs, cultural norms in the Philippines consider abortion to be wrong. Throughout Filipino history, there has been an emphasis on preserving life and celebrating new births. Abortion is seen as a violation of natural law and is viewed with great disdain by many Filipinos. In fact, it is still considered taboo in some parts of the country and those who support it are often looked down upon or ostracized from society.

Finally, access to contraception can play an important role in reducing unwanted pregnancies and ultimately the need for abortion. Many people in the Philippines lack access to contraception due to poverty and cultural taboos. This makes it difficult for women to take preventive measures which can ultimately lead them to seek abortion as a last resort.

In conclusion, abortion should not be legalized in the Philippines due to religious beliefs, cultural norms, and lack of access to contraception. It is essential that we protect the right of all individuals including unborn children while also making sure that they are provided with adequate resources and support throughout their lives. This will ensure that women have the ability to make informed decisions when it comes to their reproductive health without having to resort to abortion as an option.
