

5-paragraph Argumentative Essay Example 2:

The death penalty is a highly controversial issue in modern society. Proponents of the death penalty argue that it serves as a deterrent to crime, while opponents believe that it is immoral and violates human rights. To make my stance clear, I firmly believe that the death penalty should be abolished because it is cruel and inhumane, there is no reliable evidence that it acts as a deterrent to crime, and there are other options available for punishing criminals.

First of all, the death penalty is cruel and inhumane. Executions are often done in a manner that is painful and traumatic to the person being killed. This violates the human right to life and dignity, as well as basic standards of morality.

Second, there is no reliable evidence that the death penalty acts as a deterrent to crime. Studies conducted over the years have consistently shown that states with the death penalty do not experience lower murder rates than those without it, suggesting that it does not actually discourage people from committing heinous crimes.

Third, there are other options available for punishing criminals. Life imprisonment without parole is one option, as is community service or restitution. These options not only provide justice to victims and their families, but they also give offenders the opportunity to make amends for their crimes and contribute positively to society.

Finally, it is important to consider the ethical implications of capital punishment. Killing a person deliberately goes against our most basic values of respect for human life, and it is wrong to use it as a tool for retribution.

In conclusion, I believe that the death penalty should be abolished because it is cruel and inhumane, there is no reliable evidence that it acts as a deterrent to crime, and other options are available for punishing criminals. It should never be used as a means of retribution and its use should be condemned by all.
