Personal Statement for Ph.D.

The health sector is at a crossroads worldwide, struggling to balance quality care and understaffing. What comes to my mind the moment such thoughts dominate is how we can improve the quality of care in health facilities. It may be achieved by ensuring that experts mentor graduates to handle patients professionally in the future. This insatiable desire to help underserved people and see patients being dealt with well has triggered my motivation to advance my skills in nursing and become a resourceful mentor both now and in the future. Challenges in the medical field morph with time and the current problems require an in-depth understanding of the profession. Taking care of people's physical and emotional health is what I strive to do in my future career.

My previous education ascertained that proper training and knowledge help students learn hands-on skills and handle patients better. While pursuing my BSc in Nursing, I took the time to do rotations under the supervision of senior nurses. I realized that I could fulfill my assigned duties well, and through observing what the seniors did, I could replicate their work while handling my patients. Mentors were there to correct us in instances where we could not figure out how to manage patients in critical conditions, and through continued practice, I became better. I gained much confidence, which triggered my interest to do this for the entire of my life. After graduating from nursing school, I was fortunate to work in different roles, including a nursing instructor, clinical supervisor, nurse specialist, and now a nursing instructor. Working in all these positions helped me to work with graduate nurses. I enjoyed sharing knowledge and preparing the next generation of nurses for professional practice.

My counseling background has enabled me to gain confidence in both clinical and academic areas. I have discovered that the only way to impact the nursing field is through sharing the diverse skills I have amassed through work experiences. Thus, joining your university for a doctoral degree will assist me in becoming a more refined educator. The growing need for compassionate and competent nurses is a challenge this institution proudly accepts. It will provide me with an environment that will improve my technical and critical thinking skills, which are necessary to excel in this expansive field.
